Bethesda Justice Timid About His First Case for Failure to Carry Maryland License-Event Enlivens Election Proceedings in Judge Wilson's Precinct-Another Arrest.

Though the automobilists on the Conduit road were granted on Saturday last brief respite from the eternal vigilance -is no fish story! It's a big sale of Marshal Collins and Mayor Garrett, others of the aristocratic clan in the neighborhood of Bethesda were made to Saturday, it will be remembered, was the day of the Democratic primaries in Montgomery County, and the mayor and marshal being stanch adherents of the party of Jefferson, Jackson, and "Cy" Cummings, journeyed in the early morn to Bethesda, there to exercise the inalienable right of the free-born American citizen, which is done at the polls.

Their ballots deposited, the dignitaries of the municipality of Glen Echo, assoclates of dukes, ambassadors, and chauffeurs, relaxed for the nonce their customary official demeanor and mingled with the throng of Montgomery County Democrats, discussing with affability and oviality the merits and chances of sucess of the respective candidates.

Collins Sniffs Battle. The mayor, in fact, being removed from he jurisdiction over which he presides, was inclined to make a holiday of the occasion. Not so Collins. As deputy sherff, his was the duty to uphold the laws of the State of Maryland, and, to adopt a after witnessing his methods, he was "on Collins was leaning nonchalantly against cussion surrounding him, when suddenly above the hum of voices was heard the 'chug-chug" of an automobile.

And Lo, the Number Was Missing. Slowly the machine approached, and a shal's brow. Was he to be cheated of his prey, and was the expectant throng of Montgomery County Democrats to be disappointed in their expectations of witessing an arrest by him of whom they had heard such great things?

It was not to be-the god of his good fortune was with him.

As the automobile approached, the chauffeur had no Maryland license. Like a hound released from the leash, driven by one Edward Washington, a colored chauffeur, and occupied by a woman ored chauffeur, and occupied by a woman and child, Collins commanded the machine to halt. He sold something like fifty chances, and Thomas Wheatley got the right one. He displayed the instrument of noise ostentatiously, and was finally haled before the mayor for carrying concealed weapons. The mayor gave Wheatley the choice of six months in prison with the revolver or freedom without it and the mayor kept the gun.

Then Deputy Marshal Weiner, who arrested Wheatley, brought before the bar of justice Thomas A. Henry and Harry Wilson, of Washington, accused of drunkenness and disorderliness. The letter, in part, is as follows:

"Our children had all they could want to amuse them. They had swings, hobbyhorses, a fricycle; they played croquet and many other games. They had a lonkey, which they used to ride bareback or hitch-up to a cart and drive, and also a goat and some pigs to play with. One evening the boys put on boxing gloves, and the police officer who guards the camp umpired the matches. Every day all the children went in swimming.
